

THE THOUGHTS OF DYING MEN.

WHAT THE SUFFERING SAXON MINERS WROTE.

Harrisburg, March 24.—During the late strike of the miners in the Schuylkill coal region I had occasion to visit several of the mining towns. In one of them I enjoyed the hospitality of an intelligent miner who came to America twenty years ago from Saxony, where he had worked in the mines. He left that country soon after the occurrence of one of the most terrible colliery disasters on record, by which a large number of miners lost their lives. He was one of the force of miners who volunteered to enter the dangerous depths of the exploded mine for the purpose of attempting the rescue of some victims of the disaster, but might possibly have survived the explosion itself but for being hurled from the mine by a falling rock. There had been a large number of such victims, as the resulting party found too late, the obstructions between them and the doomed men having been too great to permit of removal in time to save them from a lingering and horrible death. Of that melancholy catastrophe the miner friend has preserved a more remarkable record in a series of manuscript copies translated into English of messages written to their friends by such of the doomed Saxon miners as were not killed outright by the explosion, but were among those who were preserved for the no less sure and more terrible death by suffocation, as the poisoned gases slowly destroyed the pure air that remained in the mine. These messages were found in note-books and on scraps of paper on the dead bodies of the poor men when they were recovered. These last messages from the dead certainly have no parallel in heart-touching pathos. Nowhere, in history or romance, is such a scene depicted as is shown by these simple messages—a picture of men, face to face with death, awaiting its coming with a calmness and resignation which only the noblest and strongest hearts could summon. Not one word in the whole record reveals a feeling of bitterness against the fate they could not avert. There is an intensity of pathos in some of the lines scrawled by these death-besieged men in the gloom of their narrow prison. For instance, one of them, a miner named Reiche, held in his hand when his dead body was found a scrap of paper on which was scrawled the following words:

"Dear Sister: My last thought will not be distorted when they find me. I might have been better to you. Janet found me. Good-by."

Reiche, as my old miner friend told me, having the history of all these poor men still fresh in his mind, was a severe man, his only relative being a sister, a young and pretty girl named Reiche, who had charge of her brothers' households. She was loved by a young miner named Janetz, and she loved him in return. Her brother refused to consent to her marrying Janetz, and had commanded all communication between them to cease. Janetz was one of the victims of the mine disaster. Pinned to his blackened coat when his body was found, lying near that of Reiche, was a leaf from his note-book, on which he had written the following words:

"Dear Sister: My last thought will not be distorted when they find me. I might have been better to you. Janet found me. Good-by."

It is well with my brother, and my heart holds no bitterness. Thy name will be the last words my lips shall speak. Farewell."

After absence of all selfishness, all replings over their fate as it immediately affected themselves, is touchingly apparent in all the messages. Living close to the body of the young miner Janetz was that of his friend Moritz, who had a wife and two children. A paper in his cap he had written these words:

"Janetz has just died. Richer is dying. He says: 'Tell my family I leave them with God.' Farewell, dear wife. Farewell, dear children. May God keep you."

Two brothers of the name of Jaehn were employed in the mine, working in alternate "shifts." On the day of the disaster the brother Jaehn turned it was to work was unable to go, and his brother, although the poor man was among the victims. This message was found on his dead body:

"Thank God for His goodness, brother! You are safe!"

The miner Schmidt wrote: "My dear relations, while seeing death before me I remember that I have not until now met again in happiness." One of the doomed men was a man of family named Muller. His message, found on the fly leaf of a Testament in his pocket, was one of the most touching of all.

"Dear wife, he wrote, 'take good care of Mary. In a hour in the bedroom you will find a child. Farewell, dear mother! We will meet again.'"

The Mary he mentioned was the mine's only daughter, who was blind, a mute and deaf. Her mother, who was mentioned as dying in Muller's message, simply wrote on a piece of paper which was found on the fly leaf of a Testament in his pocket, was one of the most touching of all.

"Dear wife, he wrote, 'take good care of Mary. In a hour in the bedroom you will find a child. Farewell, dear mother! We will meet again.'"
